Summary

With China's economic growth, domestic logistics-related infrastructure has made great progress in this decade. The results have been the reinforcement and expansion of all logistics facilities, such as roads, rail, ports, and airports, by means of the powerful logistics policy which the Chinese government has put into force. On the other hand, logistics services have shown signs of a shift from quantitative to qualitative growth. It is an important issue for the Chinese government to plan their new logistics policy in step with the changing trends.
